History of International Women's Day

International Women's Day grew out of the demands of European socialist women for better working conditions. Clara Zetkin, at the Second Conference for Socialist Women in Copenhagen in 1910, called for March 8th to be observed world wide as International Women's Day.

In Australia in 1902, following Federation, the Commonwealth Franchise Act gave women the right to vote and to stand for Federal Parliament. However Aboriginal women only achieved the right to vote in 1967. Through the work of the Womanhood Suffrage League women gained suffrage and began the first significant steps toward equality between men and women.

Green, white and violet were the colours adopted by English suffragists, as they echo the rallying cry: Give Women the Vote. They have been used ever since to symbolise the women's movement. The first IWD activities occurred in the Shoalhaven in 1991, when women marched through Nowra.

Some of the major issues on which women continue to campaign include workplace reform, international human rights, poverty, childcare and violence against women.

IWD stands for equality between women and men. It is a time to reflect on progress made, to call for change and to celebrate acts of courage and determination by those who have played an extraordinary role in the history of women's rights.
